As one of the culture capitals of the world, London offers sight seeing and tourist experiences that you can't find anywhere else. Get the most out of your London vacation and let loose by visiting these ten must see things to do in London!

1. The British Museum. Sir Hans Sloane donated his mass collection of over 71,000 intriguing items when the British Museum was founded in 1753. When the museum began to gain popularity in the 1800s, its inventory swelled to over seven million objects of interest many of which are over 10,000 years old. The British Museum's charter had stipulated that the museum remain open free of charge to all those curious and studious persons who wish to enter. Spend an awe inspiring afternoon roaming the eternal corridors. Discover some of humanity's greatest cultural achievements and explore the great relics of the Greek and Egyptian empires.
2. British Airways London Eye. Attracting nearly four millions visitors every year, the London Eye rates as one of the most popular attractions in London. This observation wheel towers 135 meters over the city of London and is, at this time, the highest observation wheel in the world. This example of modern engineering lets visitors view London from a new vantage point, showing sections of the city that can not be seen from the ground. Described as an inspiring and magical experience, the London Eye has become a must if visitors are to round out the London experience.
3. Saint Paul's Cathedral. A fascinating repository of British history and an inspirational centerpiece of reconstruction after the great London fire of 1666, Sir Christopher Wren's cathedral still remains a spiritual focus of Great Britain. Many royal weddings, birthdays, celebrations and even funerals of Great British leaders have taken place under the great dome of Saint Paul's Cathedral and it continues to be a conservatory of historical lore.
4. The National Gallery. Located right at Trafalgar Square, it contains some of the world's finest art dating back to the 1200s. Construction of the National Gallery started in 1832 and since then, it has acquired the great art of da Vinci, Monet, Renoir, Van Gogh and many more. A visitor can take days inside the National Gallery and still not be able to view all it has to offer.
5. London Zoo. Located in Regents Park, one of the world's most famous zoos houses over 12,000 animals. Animal shows are held daily to allow zoo visitors to learn more about a species from the animal's handler. The London Zoo is not to be missed, according to both visitors and residents, and it is suggested that you visit at least twice in order to get the most from the London Zoo experience.
6. Tate Modern. Viewed as London's most unique gallery, it includes a variety of exhibitions and superb collections of modern art. With something to interest both children and adults, amateurs and experts, the collections of artists like Andy Warhol, Matisse and Bacon still attract fans. Tate Modern is thought to be one of the top must see galleries of London.
7. Tower of London. Built with imported white stone from France, the macabre attraction remains witness to the place where the London citizenry has, over the centuries, been protected, imprisoned, and executed. The infamous prison was dubbed the bloody tower where Richard III had allegedly killed his nephews.
8. The Natural History Museum. A grand gothic building that contains one of the biggest collections of dinosaurs in the world, with exhibitions filling the great halls and towering above amazed visitors.
9. The Madame Tussaud's Experience. A museum of realistic waxworks and animatronics displays, reliving the darkest eras of British history with beheading, torture, murder and plague depicted with eerie sound effects. Staff have been known to don costumes and surprise unsuspecting visitors to add excitement to the experience.
10. Westminster Abbey. A medieval work of architectural genius, and the resting place for kings, scientists, statesmen, poets and musicians since 1066. Tourists can enjoy the intriguing literary history, explore the artistry that went into the paintings, tombs and murals, and be awed by the gothic architecture. Westminster Abbey has become one of London's most stately and historic structures.
