If you're going on a holiday there are a great many places that you can go to. This holds especially true if you're single with no responsibilities to look to. However, if you've got a family then you'll want to look into somewhere that the whole family can enjoy. A vacation that suits not only your needs, but your partner's needs, and your kids' needs as well. If you sit back and take a look at it that can be an almost monumental thing to look for in a vacation spot. What you need therefore are some great family vacation ideas.

There are many great vacations and vacation spots that you can take your family to, but sometimes it just isn't appreciated and you only realize at the last minute that you've chosen the wrong place. It's no use asking anyone where they want to go, you've done that already and you ended up worse off than before. So now you just take pot luck and go on a vacation that you think might suit you and your family.

The problem with that is that pot luck generally tends to leave at least one family member feeling slightly miserable and yourself slightly off balance as well. Since what you need are a few great family vacation ideas, I've obliged by putting pen to paper and giving you an insight into a few family vacation ideas that worked well for me.

First off you could always try your hand at camping. A lot of kids really enjoy getting down and dirty with nature, and this can also be an invaluable bonding experience. If your kids don't mind sleeping out of doors and roughing it for a few days then camping might be the very thing that you need for one of your great family vacation ideas. Of course if your kids don't appreciate having to grub around and go without their computer screen you might be better off not trying this idea out.

Another one for your great family vacation ideas is to take your family driving through the countryside. You should naturally have an ultimate goal in your mind, but taking a long road trip might just be what you've been looking for in a family vacation. When I planned this vacation however, my kids were fairly young and I still at least had some semblance of control over them. I'm guessing that's why this vacation worked so well!

The all time favorite one of the family vacation ideas that I had however was, I feel truly inspired, and I still look back on that vacation with a certain amount of smugness. No it wasn't the beach although I've found that to be the next best of my great family vacation ideas. It was instead a Disney World vacation that I found quite by accident and that was within my affordable price range. There's nothing like a little Disney magic to work wonders on your kids!

Visiting the Western Cape in South Africa is a wonderful experience. You can do an unforgettable tour of the wine route and find accommodation in Franschhoek situated close to all the major routes and places to see.
